MC has a job at the local library opposite her college that just introduced a night shift system for late working students and staff.

They are backed up with their own assignments and are becoming sleep deprived, hallucinations are not new to them during deadline month. They are testy, tired and impatient trying to maintain their bursary level.

They take over counter medication for the hallucinations, however due to her busy schedule, there have been times they can't always recall whether they've taken it or not. If they can't remember, they'd prefer not to take it to avoid abuse.

They have a track record of not doing well in customer service jobs due to her attitude during hectic college times.

 - NPC 1: "Oh! I wouldn't want to trouble you..."
 - "Not at all... Do you have a preferred genre?"
 - NPC 1: "You know, I've always enjoyed those story history books - those ones that are told like stories - not like those stupid learning books. Like -like..."
 - "Long Walk to Freedom?"
 - NPC 1: "Yes! It's like you read my mind!"

- "Mmm - we have 'The Boy in Stripe Pajamas'? - about a boy in a concentration camp during WWII - let me get it for you, sir."
 - Check where "Documentaries will be stored".
 - Go to the book shelf where the book is stored - Click 'E' to retrieve book.
 - NPC 1: "Thank you, librarian - they must be happy to have someone like you here - much better than the previous one." - leaves.
 - Mysterious female whisper: "Thank you..."
 - "Is it time for me to take my meds again?"
 - Option 2: "...he must not have a very good memory... Can you maybe describe the book for me, Sir?"
 - NPC 1: "Mmm... it's that one about that one place - the Tali...ban? ... called... Ma-? Mahala...?"
 - "'I am Malala', perhaps...?"
 - NPC 1: "That's probably ...the one..."
 - "Let me get it for you, sir - And if it's not, we can try, try and try again!"
 - NPC 1: Chuckles
